Brainbox (A Short Story) Christian Cantrell

When humanity is forced to the edges of the last remaining habitable regions along Earth's equator, three nations turn against one another, competing for resources in a desperate bid for survival. In an effort to end a decades-long stalemate with China and Russia, the American military turns to Miguel dos Santos, a brilliant roboticist living in self-imposed exile. They're after his creation—the Autonomous Self Replicating Asset (ASRA)—a ruthless robot that makes the perfect soldier. Key to ASRA's utility is its brainbox, a neurological processor that combines the logic and reasoning of a computer with the creativity and free will of a human. ASRA is the Americans' best hope at finally winning the seventy-five-year Equatorial Wars, but as Miguel reluctantly carries out his orders, it becomes clear he has his own plans for the fate of humanity.

Brainbox is a stark, chilling vision of the future of warfare in a devastated, dystopian world.
